Christopher Tomliuson, a bartender in Ryan & Hartley's saloon at No. 1925 Market street, was shot and almost instantly killed in the caloon about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Tombuson and Marshall had a drink, sfier which, Marshall says, Tomlinson prosucced a little revolver, declaring he had bought it from a negro for one dollar.

It had been left on the roof by tinners and was discharged upon striking the bar, he carpenters. After his return from Europe, about a year ago, he enjoyed good health for a time, and then he began to fail. He is a very hard worker and, unless compelled to do so, will not take necessary rest. His labors have been arduous for several years.

During this time he has built a church, a schoolhouse and a parochial residence, besides, paying for the real estate on which the buildings stand, and also buying and paying for another house, which was formerly used as a parochial residence, but which is now used for a residence for the sisters who teach in St. Rose's School.

Mr. Herbert Spencer, about whom such great auxiety has been felt for a long time, is regaining his health very subsfactorily. His health now enables him to work regularly at the revision of his books, and he hopes eventually to revise all that form part of his great system of philosophy. Aiready he has revised three volumes, including "First Principles." The fourth may be ready next year. It is likely that Mr. Spencer may before then add some general papers to the volume of his writings, which consists of fragments.

ABOUT LITERARY FOLKS AND THEIR WORK.

Gilbert Parker, author of "The Battle of the Strong," new in its forty-fifth thousand, and recently arranged as a play for Miss Marie Burroughs, was the first writer of note to develop the mine of material for romance that lay buried in the records and traditions of British America. Until he published his book of remarkable short stories under the title of "Pierre and His People," Canada was an almost unknown land to readers of fiction. "The Parables of a Province" followed quickly upon his first group of stories, and ever since then his novels and plays have been much in

Workmen carried the body to the office and put it in an ambulance, which was called. The doctors at the City Dispensary said that death bad Tilbury, where so many Americans every year alight from the Liverpool steamer

In "Alice of Old Vincennes" Mr. Maurice mpson has written one of the very best of the many historical novels which have to do with the times of the Revolution. Even Western folks know little about the achievements of American arms in the West in the war for independence. No other book has told this story so well as has "Alice of Old Vincennes." How the Middle West was preserved to the Union, and what bearing the expedition of George Rogers Clark had on the history of Louisiana should be known to every reader, and to find out he must go to the story of Alice and her American Irving Bacheller's book, a story of the North country, is one of the best-selling books of the season. Eben Holden is a delightfully honest and homely character. The committee in charge of the trial was composed of C. G. Taussig, chairman; Melvin Adams, Cari Haes, William Zeitler, Earl Hitchcock, Norman Saddler and E. Caplane. Hatry Wilson was appointed judge for the occasion. The lawyers for the prosecution were Leo Landau and Edwin Paddock, while those for the defense were John Sers and Ralph Roeder. The prisoner was M. Saddler, who assumed the stage name of Ed Thompson for the occasion.

The charge against the prisoner was the embszzlement of $6.090 from the Union Steel Company, and the evidence which was introduced in proof thereof was humorous in the extreme. Melvin Adams was a witness for the defense, and assumed the name for the occasion of Steal 'Em Fowler. He was blacked up in minatrel style, and were a calico walst, cut in lady's fashion. William Zeitler, another witness, was made up as a German of the approved comedy type, and went under the stage name of Heinrich Sauerwein. and went under the stage name of Heinrich Sauerwein.

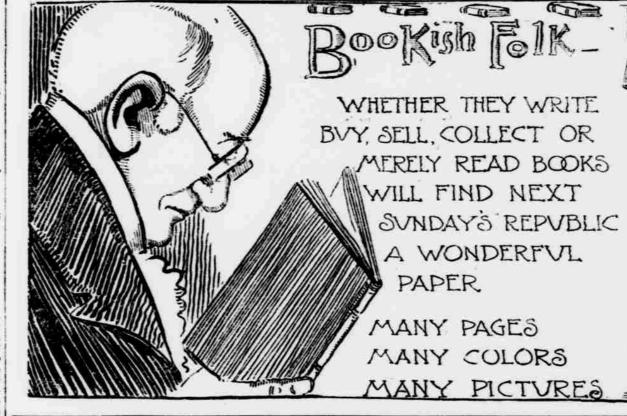

Robert Day and E. Harrington appeared for the prosecution. The arguments advanced to support the charge against the prisoner were that he had been seen spending considerable money lately, while the arguments in his defense mainly consisted of claims that the money had been stolen beforehand. been in his domestic circle one of the mos lovable men in history.

A book of reminiscences of the famous beauties of America is surely worth the reading. Virginia Tatuali Peacock has published, through the Lippincott Company, a most interesting volume of "The Famous American Belles of the Nineteenth Centu-ry," a beautifully flustrated and handomely bound book. Nellie Hazeltine Paranore is one of the belies of this book.

The early death of the talented Stephens Crane is a sorrow to the world which knew him. One of the legacies of his pen is presented through the Lippincott Company in "The Great Battles of the World," cribed with all the fire and vividness of the author of "The Red Badge of Courage."

Two books of historical and literary in-attempts have also been made to locate Felton, the Vermont village where the events described in the book took place. Mr. Dix, however, states that the Deacon is not drawn from any actual personage what-ever, and that, to the best of his knowledge, there is no village of Felton, ander that or any other name, in New England, Intending pilgrims may therefore spare their journey.

Mr. Richard Whiteing, author of "No. 55 John Street" and "Paris of To-Day," who fell ill immediately after writing the letter work, is gradually recovering his strength. Although able to work again, he finds wa self easily farigued, and has to lay lown his pen at frequent intervals. A change of all is expected to do much toward restoring his old-time vigor. His recent breakdown had its origin in overwork.

"The Eagle's Heart," Mr. Hamlin Garland's new romance, promises to add another striking success to the list of remarkably successful American novels published within the last two er three years. The book is attracting much attention in Eggland, while in this country there has already been a demand for new editions.

"In the Days of Jefferson" is the title of Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth's new historica story for young readers, which is published by D. Appleton & Co. A number of striking and romantic events in Jefferson's early fife have been utilized by the writer in a story of remarkable interest. It introduces Patrick Henry and other lenders of the times. The historical value is enhanced by the approach of the anniversary of the Louisiana

General Henry L. Abbott, writing on "The Best Isthmian Canal" in the December Atlantic, gives an opinion of the relative ad-vantages of the Nicaraguan and Panama routes of interoceanic waterways, and favors the latter.

The cover of the Christmas number of the Ledger Monthly is a reproduction of a painting of a Christmas dinner scene, a rich picture of contemporary life by the well-known artist, Victor Perard, This is supplemented by litustrated Christmas ar-ticles and stories. "Christmas Heliday En-tertainments" and "Santa Claus Among the Poor Children" are full of suggestions for these who provide for the happiness of the little ones. Hall Caine's story, "Jan, the leclander," which was commenced in the November number, is continued.

Stephen Crane was discovered by English readers, and it looks as if a new American writer in Crane's own field is to win note worthy recognition from the same source. The publishers say that a large edition of "Who Goes There" has been taken up by English renders. This is the story of a spy in the Civil War; and a love story, too; but went into the parliamentary fight with zeal its interest turns on the spy's loss of memthe day after its publication by the Macmilian Company.

Ralph Henry Barbour, who wrote that rattling good book about American school life, and particularly about football, "The Half Back, is now having published through D. "The Powers That Prey" is a unique collection of stories which, perhaps, have acquired timeliness in view of the present reform movement in New York City. The tales deal with the relation of the criminal clarges to the police, and show how vice is protected and carried on, not only unde the eyes of the police, but with the alof these servants of the law. McClure, Phillips & Co. are the publishers.

McClure, Phillips & Co., publishers "Monsieur Beaucaire," have found it neces-sary to go to press with another edition of 19,000 copies. This is the sixth edition of this book, and brings the total up to 26,000. The author, Mr. Tarkington, is at present in New York, conferring with Mr. Mansfelin regard to the stage production of the
